FOREWORD

This book is presented to you, the students of Kentucky State College. It is offered to you with the very real hope that through its pages the forward look of your school will be vividly shown to you.

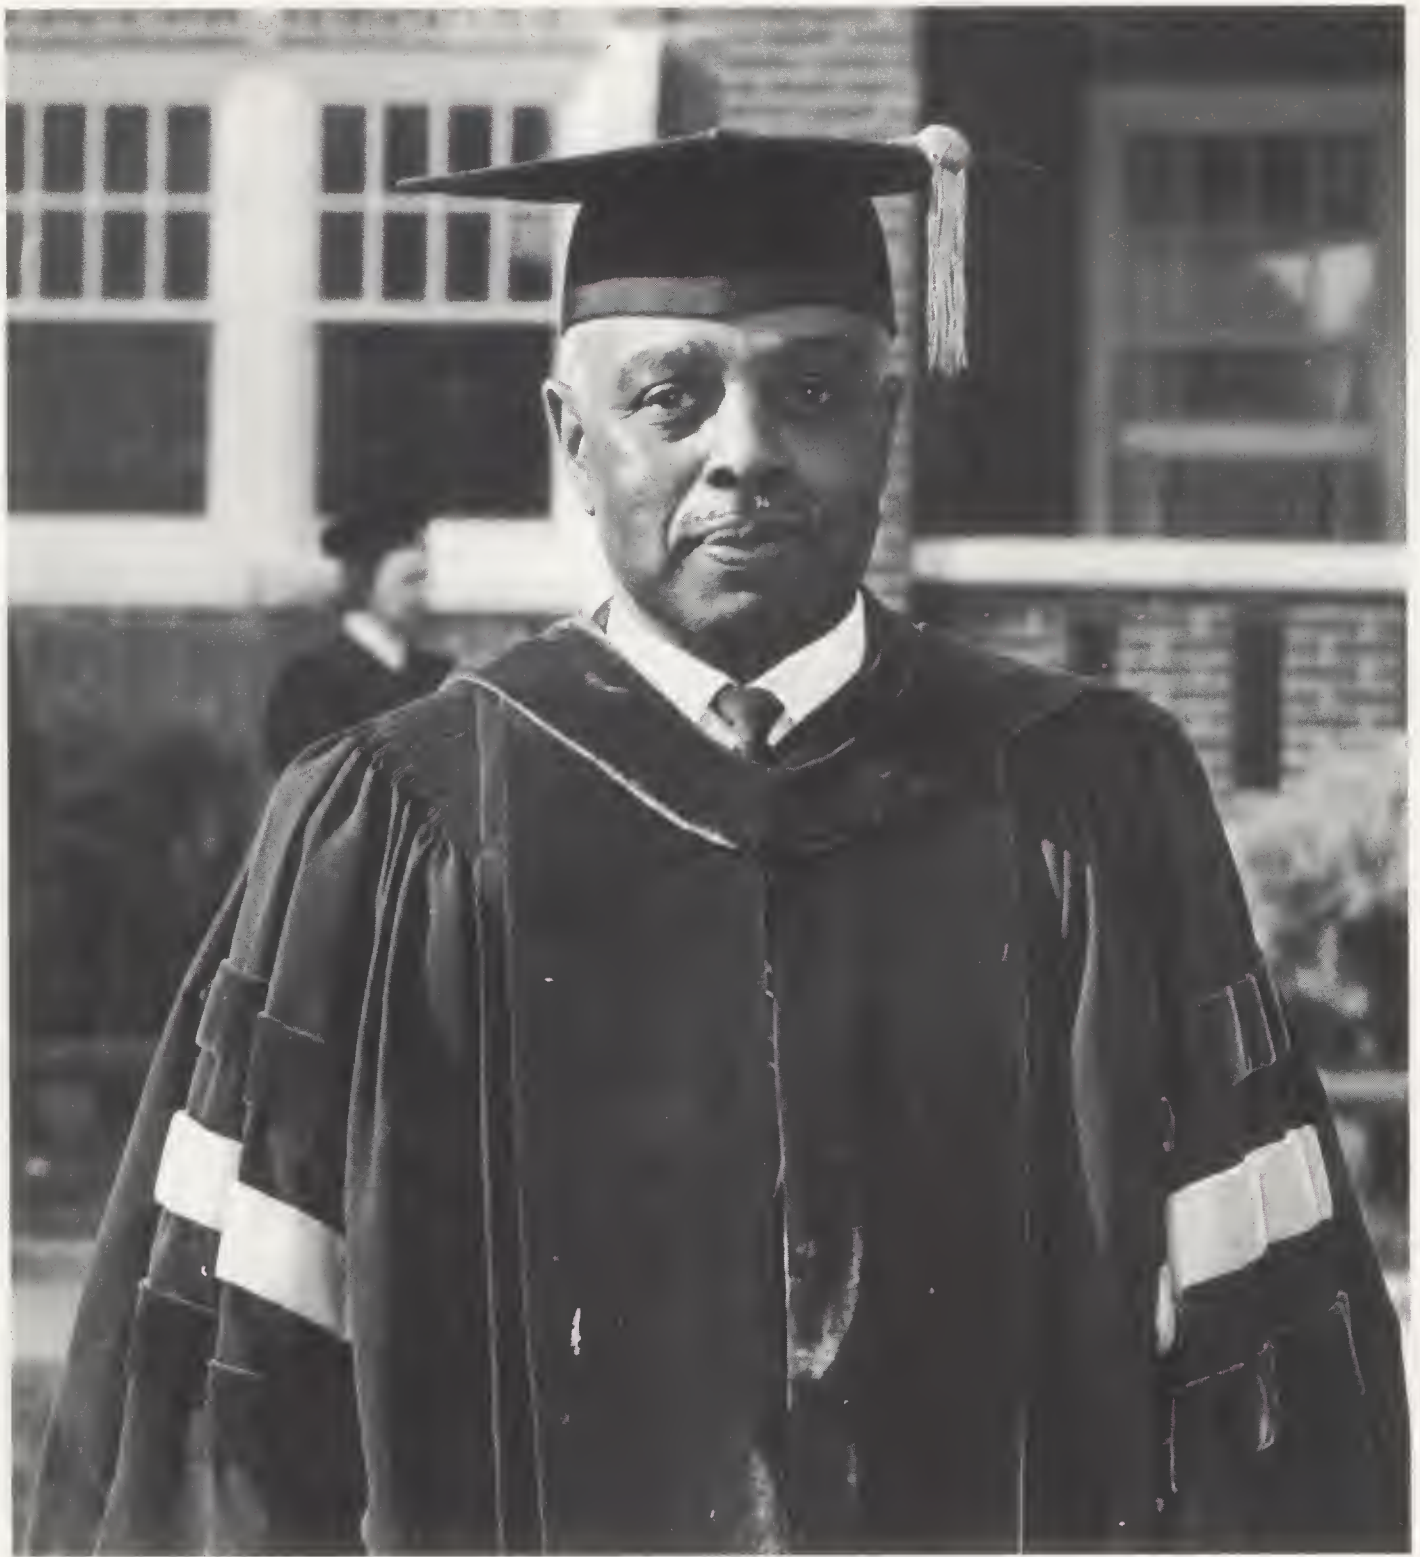

A school is many things, but above all else a school is its student body. The following pages attempt to reflect the activities of your student body as it has looked in this year toward its school's future. This future will be anchored in the traditional respect for the intellectual life that has for so long been at the heart of Kentucky State College and will be spurred on by the present vigorous search for an even higher degree of excellence. Your college life as you live it so fully in the present, offers an unclouded indication of your school's future.

As you look back in future years, may you see that in the past you were a part of a dynamic academic process dedicated to making your degree from Kentucky State College one of the greatest achievements of your life.

DEDICATION

The Kentuckian, submitted to the students of Kentucky State College, as a tangible remembrance of college life, is dedicated to Dr. Carl M. Hill, and the educational philosophy which he personifies. This book, then, is dedicated to an inspiration for excellence.

With a sense of appreciation for leadership which demands respect for the academic life, and with some perception of the value of a college degree awarded for quality scholarship, the staff of the Kentuckian wishes to express an understanding of the far reaching implications of a philosophy based on an unceasing search for insight pursued in intellectual integrity. To Dr. Carl M. Hill, proven scholar, renowned intellectual leader, and recognized progressive administrator, then, as well as to the students whom he leads, we offer this book. Within the pages which follow, through a theme which shows the forward look of Kentucky State College, we shall attempt to illustrate the philosophy to which our publication dedicates itself. We present The Kentuckian as we welcome Dr. Carl M. Hill, whom we are proud to call a Kentuckian, the 'Kentuckian' to whom we dedicate this yearbook.

INAUGURAL RECEPTION

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

In October 1963, I was presented with the symbol of the Office of President of Kentucky State College, a public institution. In taking this symbol, I accepted formally a challenge, a privilege and a responsibility to dedicate this administration to the (a) achievement of excellence of work offered by the college, (b) strengthening of the foundations necessary for survival and progress in our democratic society, (c) necessary increase in quantity without the loss of quality, and (d) voice of the people if this voice does not conflict with the proper functions of an educational institution. This symbol, although accepted by me not for myself alone, but for the faculty, students, alumni, government and the people, and the Board of Regents. For the teamwork of all these groups is essential to the full realization of the meaning of this symbol.

No educational institution, public or private, can move ahead or achieve academic quality without a prepared and constantly preparing faculty working together to inspire students to fulfill their maximum potentials. In teaching, research, guidance, the increase in the number of cooperative, creative and dedicated faculty is a primary consideration. Kentucky State College's faculty must concern itself with exploring and using every possible means of upgrading present curricula, as well as adding new ones. In some areas, we must attack the triple problem of catching up, keeping up and moving ahead—all at the same time. The tasks facing us are not easy to accomplish, but many problems have been identified, solutions proposed, and work begun.

Also, the students of an educational institution should sense and respond positively to the direction of the institution; discover and reassess their desires and Capabilities; move ahead on all fronts; and accept the rigors of scholarship; the elevation of the cultural and moral, as well as the benefits and boundaries of the social. The resultant atmosphere will be one in which both student and faculty can surmount many difficulties which obstruct, or even subvert, individual and group progress.

Along with the faculty and students, the alumni represent an invaluable asset to an institution. They are in a real sense Kentucky State College away from the campus, and therefore have the opportunity and responsibility to contribute to the stability, progress and prestige of their alma mater.

While the people and the government which represents the people do not, and should not exercise direct control in educational matters, the constructive and balancing voice of the people should be heard; progressive and realistic financial needs should be met by the government and supported by the people.

In addition, the Board of Regents, from whom the President receives his direct authority to implement major programs, has a great responsibility in the forward movement of Kentucky State College. The Board has accepted this responsibility with insight and sensitivity; with cooperation and dedication.

The symbol of the Office of President which I accepted then, can have the most satisfactory and creative meaning only as the faculty, students, alumni, the people and government, and the Board of Regents join hands, join minds, and join hearts to achieve a common goal: A Kentucky State College second to none in quality education. This is my assignment and I have every reason to believe from the support already given that this is the assignment of our faculty, students, alumni, the people and government as well as the Board of Regents.

So I am happy to congratulate you, the members of the senior class. You have reached an important goal in your career. You are on the alumni threshold, and are greatly involved in the symbol to which I have referred. It is my hope and belief therefore that you will continue to pursue excellence, and by your accomplishments and cooperation; by your social and economic awareness; by your spiritual and moral values, give the highest meaning to our symbol.

Carl M. Hill, President
